My name is Cate and I am a helpless Gardenholic I come by it honestly my mother was a serious Gardenholic. My guest knows no bounds I fear no gopher, snake or beetle. I do however have an unnatural fear of cold snaps in Spring as I live in a place that freezes often times in the middle of spring. The beautiful California desert has been the home of my obsession since my youth. I grew up in this house and four years ago inherited it back from my mother. Many a hot afternoon my brothers and I worked in that yard trying to coax good dirt out of sand. I am sad because it has taken me four years to turn the dust and sand back into real dirt. This year it was working things were growing little pieces of green popping up in the vast beige wilderness. Then disaster struck a late season frost came albeit brief and yet magnificent in its powers of destruction. My poor little green wanna grows, twas a sad day indeed for the Garden Gnome, and pink flamingo. Everyone said" you should get a greenhouse that way you can start growing and the freeze if it happens wonâ ™t, affect them every year.". I thought that was an excellent point but who can afford a greenhouse I ask myself? Then I stumbled across this handy little guide. My mind immediately raced in the direction of my brothers. Surely I can lure them over with promises of reproductions of our favorite summer dinner of my momâ ™s. Oven fried chicken, potato salad and cucumber, tomato sweet marinade with cornbread. It was hands down our favorite summer dinner after working in her garden all day. After reviewing the book I realized my daughter could help me do this and save the hassle of the dinner. That is how well the author breaks it down as if he had an Aunt Cate in his life.
